

AI-Generated Sketch of the Week

February 10, 2023

The city is on edge. Reports of a suspected murderer have been flooding the police department for the past week. The suspect is believed to have killed multiple people and the authorities are desperate to bring him to justice. Detective John Doe, a seasoned veteran of the force, is about to enter the suspect's house in search of evidence. The stakes are high and the tension is palpable as the detective moves deeper into the unknown. Will he be able to catch the killer before it's too late?

Operator: Detective, you there?

Detective: Yeah, I'm in. Place is real quiet.

Operator: What does it look like?

Detective: Living room's a mess. Books, papers, coffee cups all over the place. Smells like someone's been pouring bleach. No sign of the suspect.

Operator: Keep your eyes open. Kitchen?

Detective: Just checked it. Ain't been used in a while. Fridge's empty, counters are covered in dust.

Operator: Weapons or signs of a struggle?

Detective: Nothing. Place is real quiet. Almost too quiet.

Operator: Keep searching.

Detective: Wait a sec... I just found something.

Operator: What is it?

Detective: Mother of God...

Operator: Detective, come in!

Detective: It's worse than I thought. This guy isn't a murderer after all. He's something much worse.

Operator: What is it? What did you find?

Detective: Basement's got a big tank of what looks like toxic chemicals.

Operator: What kind of chemicals?

Detective: Looks like a pesticide that can cause mild stomach ache.

Operator: ... Ok. That doesn't sound so bad.

Detective: There's more. It looks like the suspect had plans to poison the city's water supply. Blueprints and diagrams everywhere.

Operator: Poison the city's water supply? With mildly irritating pesticide?

Detective: Damn it man, don't you see? The pesticide may be mild, but that's a really big tank. He could poison the whole city!

Operator: The whole city? But there's ten million people here!

Detective: That's right. Good thing I got here when I did.

Operator: Detective, get out of there now! This is way worse than we thought. I thought you were searching the house of a murderer, not a monster!

Detective: I've got to take the risk. I took the decision to join this force, I knew the risks. If I don't keep the civilians safe from mild stomach aches, who will?

Operator: The suspect might come back at any minute!

Detective: Damn it man, I can't leave! There's too much at stake. Just hurry up and send backup. We need to put an end to this threat right here, right now.

Operator: I'm sending backup right now. ETA fifteen minutes. I just hope they get there before the suspect. Otherwise I dread to think of what may happen to your stomach.